MONTHLY COMMENTARY (Source: Amundi)

Management commentary

October 2026 was a volatile month for the euro credit market, marked by renewed pressure on sovereign bonds, persistent macroeconomic uncertainty, and a pronounced but ultimately contained widening of credit spreads. At the start of the month, the decline in sovereign yields largely explained the performance across bond markets, with credit initially widening in a generally orderly manner rather than through a disorderly repricing movement. As the month progressed, markets somewhat stabilized and credit recovered part of its widening, although it did not fully offset the initial correction. The Euro Corporate IG index ended the month wider, at around 116 bps of spread versus benchmarks, after briefly reaching its highest levels of the year in mid-October. Overall, the message for credit remained similar to previous months: the rise in yields has remained manageable for now, but sovereign volatility continued to be the main source of pressure on total returns.
In the United States, the Fed context remained an important driver of global rate volatility. Stubborn inflation, resilient economic data, and ongoing fiscal concerns kept Treasury yields at elevated levels, while the market continued to debate the further extent of potential long-term rate increases. The FOMC left its rates unchanged, but the tone remained hawkish, and expectations of further tightening through 2027 kept the rates market under pressure. In Europe, the ECB did not provide a more favorable environment for credit. The combination of a still restrictive monetary stance, high inflation expectations, and elevated oil prices continued to weigh on sovereign curves and, by extension, on credit sentiment. In France, the domestic context remained a source of relative weakness, with a continued widening of OAT spreads weighing on French credit, particularly banks, even though this movement was more driven by sovereign market volatility and risk aversion than by a deterioration in corporate fundamentals.
From a fundamental perspective, the picture remained broadly solid. Corporate balance sheets continued to appear healthy, leverage remained under control, and debt servicing capacity stayed intact. Companies remained disciplined in terms of capex and shareholder distributions in a more uncertain macroeconomic environment, while profitability and cash generation remained sufficient to absorb a persistently high rate environment. In the financial sector, banks continued to benefit from strong capital levels and results, with asset quality remaining generally well oriented. Overall, fundamentals continued to provide an important anchor for the market, even if they were temporarily overshadowed by rate volatility and sovereign tensions.
Activity in the primary market remained resilient, although it was more uneven than in September and increasingly sensitive to market tone. October issuance remained solid, with a monthly volume of around €51.7bn in gross supply, lower than a year earlier, but year-to-date volumes remained above those of 2025. The market was again led by IG issuers and senior financials, while activity slowed in the second half of the month as volatility and central bank meetings curbed supply. Despite this, the primary market continued to function well overall, showing that issuers still viewed credit as an effective financing channel and that investors remained willing to deploy capital when valuations became more attractive.
In this context, the Euro Corporate IG market posted a total return of +0.76% for the month. Euro IG spreads widened, ending the period at 105 bps (+14 bps), resulting in an excess return of -0.49%. Non-financials outperformed financials over the month. Bank AT1s posted a total return of +0.06%, hybrids returned +0.70%, and high yield bonds declined by -1.21% over the same period.

This portfolio is managed on an index-tracking basis against the Bloomberg MSCI Euro Corporate 1-5 Year ESG Sustainability SRI index. We minimize the relative sensitivity exposure between the portfolio and its index by investing in a limited number of securities, ensuring minimal risk.
